Culinary High School Students Head to Washington, D.C. to Compete in National Healthy Cooking Competition Judged by Famous Chefs

Students to Meet with Education Secretary

CHICAGO, June 6, 2016 - High school students from across the country head to our nation's capital to compete in the 2016 Cooking up Change National finals where they will recreate their winning recipes for celebrity judges, including chefs Daniel Giusti (Brigaid, Noma, 1789) and Kwame Onwauchi (The Shaw Bijou) of Bravo’s Top Chef.

Healthy Schools Campaign’s Cooking up Change challenges high school culinary students to create healthy and delicious school meals within strict budgetary constraints of about $1 per lunch. The winning teams from ten district competitions across the country will travel to the U.S. Department of Education in Washington, D.C. where they will vie for top honors by preparing and presenting their award-winning meals to a panel of national leaders, nutrition experts and celebrity chef judges. During their visit to D.C., the students will have the opportunity to visit D.C. sites and serve their meals to legislative leaders. Their meals will also be served in their respective school districts during the 2016-2017 school year.

In addition, Secretary of the Department of Education, John King, will be coming to the kitchen from 12:30 p.m. 1 p.m. on June 6 to meet the students and wish them luck before they start cooking.

With delicious recipes like Cajun Chicken Lettuce Wrap, Moroccan Stuffed Zucchini and Low Country Chicken and Collards Pilau, these high school culinary students will battle it out in the kitchen to see who will take home top honors and make their school districts proud.

“These students are not only participating in a healthy cooking competition, but they're also lending their voices to the political debate over school food,” says Rochelle Davis, Healthy Schools Campaign’s President and CEO. “They've shown that it's possible to work within the constraints of the national nutrition standards, and by taking a page out of their cookbook, we too can make healthy and delicious school meals a reality for all students.”
